RANGER'S REVIEW

Handling Your Fish

Maintaining the quality of your catch

The tropical waters of Burketown offer a smorgasbord of exotic seafoods. Because seafood products deteriorate rapidly at high temperatures, proper care and preparation will enhance the eating quality of your catch. Remember, once fish die they begin to spoil. Spoilage occurs mainly from within the fish for two reasons. Firstly, the controlled biochemical processes that occur in all living animals to assist the digestion of food continue after death in an uncontrolled manner. The digestive enzymes attack the surrounding flesh, which is sterile. Soon after death, the micro-organisms on the skin, slime and intestines multiply rapidly and spread into the softened flesh under the skin and around the belly. The spread into the flesh is more rapid if the fish has been damaged in any way.

For release

If practical and safe, remove the hooks while the fish is still in the water. Alternatively, the use of a landing net is recommended as a safe option for the angler and the fish. The fish should be released as soon as possible after capture. Most fish can be fatally damaged if they are suspended by the gills so a cradle hold is recommended, especially for larger fish. To reduce such damage, many anglers weigh larger fish while they are still in the landing net and then subtract the weight of the net to gain an accurate weight of their released fish. Smaller fish without teeth can be held by gripping the lower jaw firmly.

Don't lay a fish which is to be released on a hot surface or allow it to thrash around on a boat's deck or the ground. If it is safe to do so, revive the fish by holding it gently in the water with its head facing into any current to allow water to pass over its gills. Pelagic fish such as tuna and mackerel are fragile and tolerate minimal handling. It is often best to spear them head first back into the water to force a rush of water through their gills.

Swim bladders of many fish caught from deep water often distend resulting in fatality after release. It therefore makes sense to move or target a different species if your catch is nearing a possession limit or the amount of fish required.

The use of barbless hooks is also worth considering as they can usually be removed quickly and easily from the fish or a hapless angler. You can catch just as well with barbless hooks, provided you keep tension on the line.

The following points will assist in maximizing the quality of your catch.

Mud Crabs

- Once a crab is removed from a trap or net, tying the claws to the body will avoid personal injury and damage to the crab.
- Crabs may be kept alive for a number of days if kept in a cool, dark, fly-proof and moist environment. Place them in a well ventilated plastic basket, cover them with a wet bag and ensure it is kept wet. Your catch may then be utilized over a number of days. Mud crabs should be killed prior to cooking. This may be achieved by either placing them on ice or by inserting a sharp instrument into the middle area of the underside of the body. Never place a live mud crab into boiling water because it will drop its claws and legs and water will be absorbed into the flesh.

Fish

- When a fish is landed, treating it gently will assist in keeping it calm.
- Never drop or throw the catch about – it may lead to violent thrashing and stress, especially on a hot deck.
- Fish should be killed and bled immediately. Rapid killing may be achieved by stunning the fish on the head area only, spiking the brain or bleeding alone. To bleed a fish, cut the gills or throat area. Ideally, bleeding should take place in a large bin of ice and water, which reduces blood clotting, assists in bleeding and reduces the temperature of the catch.
- Rapid gilling and gutting are recommended if a fish is to be kept whole. Thorough removal of all intestines and blood will reduce spoilage. Avoid breaking and spilling gut contents, or cutting into the flesh in the abdominal cavity, which will enable micro-organisms to enter the flesh.
- Fillets should be placed in a waterproof plastic bag and immediately put in ice. Liberal amounts of ice should be used to cover fish completely. The use of plastic reduces the contact of flesh with ice water and ensures the natural juices and flavours are not leached from the fillets. Do not simply throw fillets in the esky with bait and assorted contaminants.

At high temperatures, fish will pass through rigor mortis rapidly. The muscle contractions will be violent and cause the muscle blocks to “gape” or fall apart when filleted, and loss of natural juices will result. This will be evident by severe drip loss when frozen fillets are thawed out. If fish are well iced, rigor mortis will be gradual, resulting in better quality. Never straighten a fish that has been bent during rigor mortis because this will simply tear the flesh apart. Allow the fish to relax, and always under chilled conditions.

A couple of recipes to try out on your catch are listed

NUMUS

2 queenfish fillets
½ bulb of garlic
Small piece of ginger
White malt vinegar
3 tablespoons dark soy sauce
2 onions
2 tablespoons olive oil
2 tablespoons sugar

Method

Remove bloodline from fillets. Slice fish across the grain into thin slices (2 - 3 ml thick). Finely chop chillies, ginger ,garlic & onion, add to fish pieces and mix well. Add soy sauce& sugar then let stand in fridge until flesh has darkened (approximately 20 mins) Add oil and mix well. Refrigerate for further 30 - 40 minutes before consuming.

Serving-

Serve on a bed of fresh greens such as bok choy.

MEDITERRANEAN MUD

CRAB (serves 2)

2 mud crabs (1kg each)	Olive oil
4 or 5 red chillies	24 black olives
6 large ripe tomatoes	1 cup white wine
2 large onions	Salt & Pepper
1 x 500ml tomato puree	3 cloves of garlic
1 tablespoon dry mixed herbs	bunch fresh basil

Method

Remove top shell of mud crab (place thumb under rear flap and lift) and wash out. Set aside. Crack claws and body and set aside. Sauce - Finely chop onions & garlic and fry in olive oil. Add dry herbs. Skin tomatoes and chop coarsely. Mix tomatoes with onion and garlic, add white wine and bring to the boil. Reduce by half and add 500ml of tomato puree. Cook for 20 minutes. Replace top shell on mud crab, place in sauce and simmer with lid on pot until crab is cooked (approx. 7 minutes). When cooked add coarsely chopped fresh basil and olives.

Serving

Place mud crab on plate and pour sauce over. Suitable with pasta or polenta. Note - if sauce to dry, add more wine or tomato puree when cooking.

Police Beat

Police Beat

Firstly I would like to introduce myself for those who haven't met me yet. I've taken over from Paul Griffith's as Officer in Charge of Burketown Police station. Chris and I hope everyone had a good Xmas and a happy New Year. I am looking forward to working with the community to make Burketown a safe and happy place to live.

I am pleased to report that there were only a few minor traffic accidents during the festive period and that those using the road were careful and did so in a safe manner. The community of Burketown are to be congratulated for this. Just a reminder to those using the roads during the wet season to make sure you drive to the conditions. Please ensure everyone is wearing a seatbelt and the driver has not consumed any alcohol.

I'm hoping over the coming months I will get around and met a few more of you in the community, or if your passing by drop in for a cuppa. Otherwise you might catch me down by the river trying to land one of Burketown's famous Barramundi.

I am sure that 2008 will be an enjoyable one and I wish you all a happy and prosperous new year.

Tim FECKNER
Sergeant
OIC Burketown Police

MINI FISHING COMPETITION

Burketown Caravan Park's mini fishing competition will be held on Saturday 23 February 2008. Nominations open from 6am Saturday morning at the Burketown Caravan Park.

VMR NEWS

G'day all,

VMR is going from strength to strength with new members participating in meetings and also on the water, but we can always use more active members so if your interested come and see me anytime. We are now opening at 7:00 pm every Friday.

As everyone out there is boating safely we have not had any callouts this month but we need to remain alert as you never know what may happen.

It only costs $3.50/ year to become a member so come and join in and remember our motto "Drinking for a Cause".
